

Stanton on his Death-bed Said Grant Could Not Govern the Country--Andy Johnson's Opinion Indorsed,

GRANT, that it be borne in mind, that to appreciate his peculiar character as a civilian, it is important to know triumphs as a soldier, for one is a rare compliment of the other. The useful soldier is rarely changed to a peaceful civilian. There seems to be incompatibility between the two, and the soldier is by the extent to which one has allowed to exclude the other. One says a soldier cannot, late in life, become a statesman. One always a civilian cannot, late in life, become a soldier. Modern Europe, few soldiers have ward to fail. But no such merit is due to the beneficiaries of our client, some of whom have done but bring scandal upon the public eye. At least one is taunted with crime, and another, a commissioner of the republic abroad, has been guilty of improprieties inconsistent with his trust. If the United States originally in open defiance of republican principles, they have retained in office after their unfitness became painfully conspicuous. By reason before the Congressional Commission, one of these, a brother-in-law, implicated in cases of fraud as clear abroad but here at home. How a Magistrate with four millions of fellow-citizens could have done any passes comprehension.

Colored orator, Fred Douglass, was by the President as one of the persons to visit San Domingo, on his return, and almost without the consent of the Executive Man-he was repelled from the appears that crops generally are well, particularly corn, on account of the dryness of spring; but a large area of the wheat crop has been planted, and with fine weather the prospect for at least an average yield is good. Wheat, particularly hard red winter wheat, is looking badly in some localities, and in some counties the plowing up wheat fields and the planting of corn; this, however, is in some of the more northern counties of Illinois every season. Oats and other small grains are generally well, the former cereals promising a good abundant yield.
